Full Hunter's Moon

Tonight, October 9th, is the rising of the Full Hunter's Moon.

Most of our monthly Moon names come from Native American and early American folklore. However, the Full Hunter's Moon is one of two Moons that is a longstanding astronomical term. Specifically, the Hunter's Moon is always the first full Moon after the Harvest Moon (which is the closest full moon to the autumnal equinox).

The Hunter's Moon rises right around sunset—and sets around sunrise. It's the only night in the month when the Moon is in the sky all night long.

Because the Hunter's Moon rises around sunset near the horizon, it may appear bigger and more orange than your typical Moon. However, this is just the "Moon Illusion."

In the autumn months, there's no long period of darkness between sunset and moonrise for several days in a row, around the time of full moon. In the days before tractor lights, the lamp of the Harvest Moon helped farmers to gather their crops, despite the diminishing daylight hours. As the sun's light faded in the west, the moon would soon rise in the east to illuminate the fields throughout the night. A month later, after the harvest was done, the full Hunter's Moon was said to illuminate the prey of hunters, scooting along in the stubble left behind in the fields.

MOON FACTS AND FOLKLORE

Corn planted under a waning Moon grows slower but yields larger ears.

Babies born a day after the full Moon enjoy success and endurance.

A new Moon in your dreams promises increased wealth or a happy marriage.

At The Loading Pens

Quite the group of boys hanging out at the loading pens at the Kingsbury station depot around 1915. The building at the right in the background is the depot and there is a train pulling cattle cars waiting on the tracks behind the pens.

There aren't a lot of shoes being worn by the boys, but the young man standing on the ground appears to be sporting an eye patch!
